Faculty Development Programme
New Age Management: Insights from Humanities and Social Sciences
November 16-26, 2020 (Online Mode)

Programme overview: Human beings are critical resources for a sustainable society. To be able to manage themselves and the stakeholders, it is essential to be cognizant of the cutting-edge skills and competencies acquired through the vast knowledge and practice of multiple fields in humanities and social sciences. Aimed at exploring the contemporary management issues and concerns, the area of Humanities and Social Sciences offer a five-day residential program for faculty members contributing to the area of management research and education. It endeavours to provide a pragmatic and an integrative lens in understanding the current trends and challenges in management.

Objectives: To make the participants aware of:

1. The ways existing in the fields of psychology and sociology to manage the millennials of different age, working style, preference, and expectation at the workplace and beyond
2. The techniques of negotiation inbuilt in the perspectives of psychology, politics, sociology, public policy, and international context
3. The methods available in the ethical and legal domains to bring about a sustainable management and to foster a healthy society
4. The mechanisms to manage the diversity and inclusion in classroom as well as in broader societal context, drawing from the disciplines of sociology and psychology
