Profile

As an undergraduate in commerce, Neeti Ingole became interested in the ways business organizations operate. This interest led her to pursue an MBA at Indian Institute of Management Kozhikode. "I am not a traditional MBA graduate" she believes. "I didn't have a specific goal in my mind after my MBA". Neeti believes "MBA program helped me develop diverse perspectives for things and enhanced my willingness to learn newer ideas". She longed to gain a deep understanding of business operations and to augment her leadership skills, so she returned to her hometown and worked in her family business.

After spending seven years as Assistant Professor, Neeti decided to delve deeper into research. While she considered PhD Programs, she became particularly interested in PhD in Organizational Behaviour and Human Resource Management because of its interdisciplinary approach and emphasis on human relations. "My experience taught me the significance of dynamics of human relations in a workplace", Neeti says. "OB&HR truly emphasizes the value of applied research and helps solve complex organizational problems arising out of mismanagement of people, which was very appealing to me", Neeti explains.

She looks forward to acquiring rich research knowledge and pursuing a career in academia.

Research

Neeti's research interest center around women entrepreneurship. She is examining how women practice innovation and change in their entrepreneurial firm. Her secondary research interest also lies in how network dynamics between entrepreneur and stakeholders impact firm performance.
